The question of the chairman's casting vote in addition to an ordinary vote in the St. Androw's Society's annual meeting has at length been set at rest, and the members have resolved right. A second meeting was held on Friday evening, the members not being content to accept the previous decision for the banquet carried by the chairman's easting vote. There was a considerably increased attendance, and again the question of ball v. banquot was brought out, strange to say, with the result that there was again an equal division, there being 25 votes on either side. On this occasion the chairman decitized to use his casting vote, having already retworded his ordinary vote, and after a meeting of about an hour's duration it was agreed that there should be no celebration of the Scottish patron saint's day this year.

INTI-FOREIGN RIOT AT WENCHOR

The Yungning, from Wenchow, which arrived at Shanghai on the 11th Oct., brought full particulars of a riot which had occurred at Wenchow on the night of the 4th Oct. The first intimation of the riot was telegraphed up from information supplied by the Yungning on arrival at that port, though efforts had been made Mr. O. U. Staart, h Plante le not out ...... 6 by Mr. E. H. Parker, British Consul, to des patch the news overland to Ningpo, the nearest port; but the messengers refused to go, or were forcibly prevented from going. Winchow has always been considered a quiet place, the nutives appearing too stupid to beable to cause any rows or excitement, and in fact this newly opened port has been considered the most dead-and-alive place of all the open ports of China. Dpinions are divided as to whether the riot was a well-

TIN MINING IN THE MALAY

has been occupied by the Boors.

NATIVE STATES.

"Klung" writes as follows to the Strait. Times: -- I have road the letters of "Perseverance" and "A. B." on Tiu-mining with much interest. There is a great deal of truth in the letter of the former, but I don't think he has had much practical experience in Tin-mining in the Malay States. Having during the last twenty years examined at least ten separate Tin districts in the Malayan Peninsula and elsewhere. and as I practically understand the Chinese mode of working and also the Dutch system, the following remarks may be of interest to some of your readers. I will deal with the undermentioned subjects in their order, viz : 1.—The Chinese System.

2.—The European Tin-mining Companies. 3.—Suggestions for the profitable working of the European Tin-concessions. 4.-The Tin deposits and prospects of the There is little doubt that the Chinese have worked Tin on the Peninsula for the last two hundred years. They have, therefore, acquired a large amount of practical experience, and every part of their undertaking is carried out on a regular system. A good Chinese manager thoroughly understands his work, as he has prebably passed every grade in the mine. He must also have studied the deposits in his immediate neighbourhood, as he is little assisted by any boring, and on his judgment depends the success of the mines. The first step taken is forming a working syndicate, who go and prospect. After choosing a suitable spot, their next object is to raise money to start with, as the miners have rarely much capital. They generally arrange with some Chinese storekeeper, who is also a capitalist, to advance opium, provisions, and a small amount of money, charging a houvy persentage on account of the risk. They also receive all the Tin at a certain discount on the market price. Sufficient coolies are then engaged to work the mine, each sharoholder taking the lead of the different working departments; for instance, one is the cook and he sees that no provisions are wasted; one is the leader of the coolies carrying earth-baskets; another fills the baskets at the bottom of the mine, thus getting the baskets filled well and moved at a fair pace, as it is not healthy for a coolie to lag behind, and if they have confidence in the head man he is obeyed implicitly. Their first undertaking is the water supply, which is the main spring of Chinese tin-mining; it feeds the water-wheels to work their pumps, and in suitable ground, which when heavily wooded, no machinery could do, and if obliged to boldone by manual labour is the most expensive part of the heaviest deposits would form, and the strongmine. They first erect a dam in a favourable position, and bring their watercourse to the proposed mine with as much full as are exceptions; where the mountains are steen possible to work their water-wheels; they the deposits are deep, getting shallower at a disthen cut as deep a tail-race as they possi bly can, as, after the first mine is finished, this facilitates the washing of the overburden into the old mine. I have seen as much as eight ITHE CHUNG NGOI SAN PO feet deep washed off in this way by a few men. L by merely laying planks and keeping the water up to the fall. The Dutch, by taking the place of the capit alists and a judicious system of boring, in which Tin mining is carried on to a cortainty, and no ground attempted, thus receive the Tin at less than half its value, thereby making a handsome Later news has been received by the arrival profit, and the actual miners are better off than ment in the Native States gives no: assistance whatever, allowing any one to destroy as much Tin-bearing ground as he works through in competency, and if they don't alter they wil find out that they have been killing the goose in New Britain and New Ireland in the event of that is laying the golden eggs. All they care about is to collect the duties and spend them, not always wisely.

the whole system has been a mistake. I must first state that in my opinion no European com pany will ever be able to work tin as cheaply a the Chinese. Hitherto the majority of the managers have known little or nothing about tim mining, and in their wisdom utterly ignored th Chinese system, the experience of two hundred years, and considered that if they could get anything under the name of boring tools and a big centrifugal pump down anywhere, the tin would find its way ready smelted into their godowns without any further trouble. There is generally a false or upper deposit separated from the main deposit by well-defined strata, when they open out at a distance from the hills, the main deposit laying on a stratum AGENCIES ORIGINALLY ESTABLISHof kaolin or decomposed felspar quite free from silica. In the confined valleys, it is by no means so regular, the tin very often resting on the bed rock, and occasionally it is so much mixed up

The Diluvial, which chiefly occurs on the sides of hills, seems to have been left there by the gradual wasting of the matrix in which it quality. was enveloped, and then covered up again by deposit from higher levels. The Vein tin is chiefly found at Patani and the surrounding countries, in Gassen mixed with iron, forming a very hard conglomerate, seemingly having been subject to a great heat. It is found in irregular beds on the high ground, and on the slopes of hills almost similar to the diluvial. The only real veins I have observed are very thin, generally found between the limestone

I have followed up a number of tin-deposits of their source, in some finding no visible matrix, in others I have found it disseminated in the granite, generally very sparsely, but sometimes of over one hundred weight of nearly pure oxide have been obtained; but after blasting into the solid rocks tin has wholly disappeared, and I have come to the conclusion that when the tin is found in crystals it has been distributed pretty generally through some soft granitic rocks (probibly contact lodes) which will account for the quantity of falspar forming the knolin, which, having been easily decomposed, has formed the bed for the tin deposits, which have been formed at a later period by some mighty but uniform
